Department Valedictorians

Kyle James Bird, from Mapleton, Utah, majored in environmental studies and completed minors in environmental science and sustainability, mathematics, and global environmental studies. He graduated cum laude with university honors in December 2024. While at BYU, he worked in Professor Matt Bekker's tree-ring lab and interned for Grow the Flow, a bipartisan nonprofit dedicated to increasing water supply to the Great Salt Lake. Bird conducted research on water conservation, earning recognition for his honors thesis on solutions to the Great Salt Lake's dwindling water supply. Outside the classroom, he played the carillon in BYU's bell tower, attended the African Dendrochronological Fieldschool in Zambia, and studied interfaith relations at the Woolf Institute in Cambridge, England. Passionate about bridging political and environmental divides, Bird has contributed to policy-driven conservation efforts and field research initiatives. He is grateful for the mentorship, friendship, and community that shaped his journey at BYU. Bird plans to work as a field ecologist for the Bureau of Land Management, where he hopes to gain hands-on experience in ecosystem management before pursuing a master of philosophy in quantitative climate and environmental science at the University of Cambridge this fall.

Camille Brown first discovered her passion for anthropology during her junior year of high school when, in an effort to avoid chemistry, she enrolled in her first anthropology class. Now she is completing a degree in sociocultural anthropology and conducting fieldwork in Amazonian Ecuador. Centered on the indigenous Kichwa language, her research examines how songs sung by Kichwa-speaking women reflect and shape familial, romantic, and non-human relationships. Through her studies, Brown has gained a deep appreciation for the diverse ways of life around the world. A native of Olympia, Washington, Brown enjoys music, hikes, international film, and peanut butter. She is grateful for the support of her faculty and peers and is excited to return to BYU in the fall to begin a master's degree in anthropology.

Jane Drinkwater, a political science major with a second major in design and a minor in civic engagement leadership, witnessed American poverty during her mission in Indianapolis, Indiana. She returned home with a goal to improve government services, leading her to pursue her majors and minor. At BYU, Drinkwater served as editor of the Political Review and president of the User Experience Design Association. She has gained invaluable experience as a teaching assistant, research assistant, and student fellow with the Center for the Study of Elections and Democracy. Drinkwater also conducted research on Provo City's services, assisting in the redesign of the provo.gov website. In 2024 she was honored with the Truman Scholarship for public service. Drinkwater grew up in Orem, Utah, and she spends her spare time skiing, running, and playing the piano. She is deeply grateful for the mentorship, friendship, and support of her professors, family, and friends.

Jacob Benson Hutchings, who is double majoring in economics and mathematics with a minor in logic, developed an early interest in economics during his Economics 110 class with Professor James Kearl. This initial spark grew into a passion as Hutchings discovered the discipline's depth and complexity. He nurtured this passion by working as a research assistant for Professor Joe Price in the Record Linking Lab and as a teaching assistant for economics courses. Throughout his time at BYU, Hutchings presented at several research conferences and prepared published articles on many topics, including historical family structure in the United States and statistical methods for economists. Hutchings is grateful for the support of his professors and for the university's commitment to undergraduate development, which he believes has greatly contributed to his academic growth. He is especially thankful for the unwavering support of his parents in Meridian, Idaho. Hutchings looks forward to continuing his research as he pursues a PhD in economics starting this fall.

Savannah Marie Lowe felt inspired to pursue a degree in family studies at BYU after serving a mission. While working at the Provo Missionary Training Center, she discovered her passion for teaching young adults and has since committed herself to becoming a professor. Lowe developed a love for research and writing while working as a research assistant on multiple projects, as a teaching assistant, and on the School of Family Life Editorial Board. In these roles, Lowe has contributed to the publication of numerous articles on religion and families. She also participated in the School of Family Life Academy and is deeply grateful for the mentorship of her professors. She is from South Jordan, Utah, and enjoys spending her free time crocheting, reading, baking bread, traveling, and being with her husband. Lowe was recently admitted to the marriage, family, and human development master's program at BYU, which she plans to begin this fall. She hopes to pursue a PhD to conduct further research and educate students on the transition to marriage.

Nadia Mando McNames, a psychology major and Wheatley scholar, works as a research assistant, lab manager, and psychometrist at the BYU Comprehensive Clinic. Her research focuses on the intersection of mental health, religion, and family relationships. Mando McNames is thankful to her mentors Jared Nielsen, Justin Dyer, and Joseph Fair for their dedicated and Christlike guidance. She is deeply grateful for the support of her husband, Joseph, her friends, and her family in Baton Rouge, Louisiana. Above all, she is thankful for her Heavenly Parents, the Spirit that guides her, and a Savior who provides His perfect Atonement and example. In addition to her studies in psychology, Mando McNames is passionate about literary analysis, foreign films, and teaching others how to season their food. She will begin a PhD program in clinical and counseling psychology in Mobile, Alabama, this fall.

Erika Joyce Olson, a sociology major with minors in civic engagement leadership and philosophy, has always been fascinated by how she and others fit into the social world. While at BYU, she was one of the inaugural copresidents of the Sociology Academic Student Association. She was also a research assistant and project manager for the longitudinal Life and Family Legacies Study. While working on the Program Evaluation and Assessment Team in Bolivia, she learned about the critical role of applied sociology and community collaboration. Olson is grateful for her parents in Castle Rock, Colorado, and for her family and professors, who encouraged her to challenge herself and orient her education toward addressing societal inequities. Following graduation, she plans to pursue a master's degree in public administration and work toward bridging the gap between social science, policy, and programs.

Hyrum Kenneth Veach, a history major with a political science minor, has had many incredible opportunities during his time at BYU. He worked as a student assistant for BYU Special Collections; as a teaching assistant for various political science, history, and family history courses; and as a research assistant for several professors. As a research assistant for the Early British Census Project, he traveled to the United Kingdom and worked in multiple archives to photograph and index early census returns. Through coursework and mentorship from his professors, Veach developed strong research skills, culminating in the publication of two peer-reviewed articles: one on rural protest in 19th-century England and one on local politics in territorial Utah. A native of Millcreek, Utah, Veach is deeply grateful for the support of his professors and family. After graduation, Veach plans to attend graduate school to continue his studies in history, focusing on religion and politics in early modern England.
